Greetings from the Class of 1998! Most of us are halfway through our junior semester at our respective schools and cramming for midterms. I sent out a huge e-mail and got such overwhelming responses – it was so great to hear back from everyone and know what it that they're doing. I hope this doesn't get tedious, but I've written a lot about people's majors and activities. Enjoy!

I, Sarah Hwang, am actually graduating a year early from Columbia University, majoring in English. I've been offered to become a corps member of Teach for America in Los Angeles, and as of now, I think I'm going to take it. I've been busy dancing and performing my, at times, stuffy responsibilities as vice president of the student body.

Joanna Powell, now at Yale, is majoring in Political Science. "I'm the musical director of my a cappella group at Yale, which is hard work but is teaching me a lot about singing and a lot about leadership in general." She's looking into the Peace Corps, and living in New York City, but will most likely be coming back home to California.

Leslie Godsil is a dual creative writing and art major at the University of Miami. Happy belated 21st! She is taking glass-blowing and 3-D design classes and preparing for a Spoken Word event on campus. She is looking into Teach for America, but in the meantime, is going to spend a relaxing spring break in Italy.

Morgan Tharpe is at the University of Delaware, majoring in Leadership, although she wants to head into real estate. She goes back home to Orange County during breaks from school.

Kimberly Jung will graduate from West Point in a year as a second lieutenant majoring in Mechanical Engineering. This past summer, she was at Airborne School and served as a platoon leader at Schofield Barracks in Hawaii. She says that she will probably serve two tours in Iraq or Afghanistan. Good luck!

Joan Rhee is pursuing a double major in Political Science and history at UCLA while preparing for law school. She's busy now, but is looking for an internship outside of Los Angeles, preferably San Francisco.

Andrew Ham is "ghost ridin' da whip." Ride on, Andrew.

Alex Penfold is majoring in International Relations and minoring in Chinese. He's in Shanghai now studying at Fudan University and honing in on his Mandarin. While there, he will also be interning with American firms producing goods in China and getting to understand international trade.

Emma Joshi just transferred to UCSB this semester and is majoring in Geography.

Wendolly Lemus is at University of La Verne majoring in Child Development and is busy tutoring and teaching. She's an active member of her sorority, Phi Sigma Sigma, and sits on the executive governing board.

Emily Carroll is a third-year student at the University of Chicago majoring in Environmental Studies. She works for the Environmental Studies Department and is also a Peer Health Educator with our Student Care Center. She hopes to spend this summer either in Chicago interning for a non-profit called the Center for Neighborhood Technology or in Singapore interning for AES Corporation, focusing on the development of renewable technology.
